A Designated National University

Tohoku University has officially been selected as a Designated National University by the Japanese Government.

It was one of the first three universities to be selected under this new system, which the Japanese Ministry of Education hopes will raise the standard of Japanese institutions and make them more globally competitive by providing additional financial support.

TOHOKU UNIVERSITY

Tohoku University was founded in Sendai as the third National University in 1907. It became the first Japanese university to accept female students.

Under its Research First, Open-Door and Practice-Oriented Research and Education principles, Tohoku University has become one of Japan's leading universities.

The number of students is 18,000 including 2,000 international students.

Tohoku University has 726 exchange agreements with academic institutions in 63 countries and regions as of May 2023, and has 24 overseas offices in 13 countries and regions as of May 2023.
